Part II - Written Statement of Reasons for Detention

Mr. James, I have heard your attorney and the government's attorney and read this report, and there are two big problems that are going to require me to detain you.

The first is that every time a court tells you to do something you have an obligation to do it. If I counted right there have been ten times where a court has ordered you to appear and you did not appear, so that does not indicate that suddenly my telling you to do something is going to be followed.

The other bigger problem is that once you got the felony conviction and the domestic battery conviction the law is absolutely clear you were not to have guns. It appears, and I don't have to determine whether you did or didn't, it just appears that on two occasions at least you had guns when you shouldn't of had guns. I can't assume that you are going to comply with any conditions that I would set, so I'm going to keep you detained.
